

The Moment We Bow Our Heads

You start to feel little, palms are sweaty, you mumble your words, and feel like crying out loud. Need of time travel to undo things, another realm to escape, reaching a cotton handkerchief Queens, NY brand. These are just the things that come to mind whenever having that distinct feeling. The feeling called embarrassment.

Embarrassment is a state of emotion when one feels a loss of dignity when another person observed or uncovered the socially unacceptable act the former person has done. This is the perfect situation to either wipe your dripping sweat on your eyebrows with colored handkerchiefs Queens, NY made or punch the person in front of you with a brass knuckle.

But with men who accept their fault and clumsiness as a crime against humanity, men's cotton handkerchief's Queens, NY manufactured is enough. With women, surely they won't need women's handkerchiefs Queens, NY produced to wipe away tears. Nonetheless, embarrassment gives people a sense of incapability and degraded self-esteem.

People may get embarrassed in front of a small group of audience or maybe on national, worse, international spectators. Obviously, people in these scandalous situations need more than men's cotton handkerchiefs Queens, NY fashioned. Either way, the feeling of losing honor is still present.

In smaller situations, people still get the feeling of being reduced to nothingness. When someone picks his nose and caught by people, chances are he or she will feel embarrassed in front of them and shame inside of him. When we got caught in a lie after hours of denial, we'll probably end up picking up our faces from the floor.

Not all people caused their own embarrassment. There are instances when one person makes another person suffer the consequences of actions made by the former. For example, a girl finds out she has been the talk of the town because of her outfit or a guy knew other fellows are talking about his lap dance a week ago with another guy. These situations put people to embarrassment without them actually doing the acts in front of witnesses.

The worse kind of embarrassment is public scandal. Unless you think what you did was right when you forged historical documents about the assassination of Lincoln, people who were shown on TVs bow their heads in shame. The whole nation is watching and the whole nation is staring at them. In US cases, the world watches over.

As thinking animals concerned with the image projected to the world, we find ourselves denying or rebutting the reasons contributing to our embarrassments. When we run out of reasons justifying or lying, however, there is no left for us but either to admit the acts or vanish to Atlantis.
